NOVEMBER WISDOM

November, the month in which we remember the faithful departed, calls us in turn to reflect on our own lives too. Wisdom would ask us to bear in mind that God created us and we belong to Him; that our life passes quickly and we are called to live well and cherish it; that it is but the stepping-stone to something greater and everlasting. Some lines of wisdom to help us in our own lives from Irish writers and tradition:

The difference between someone clever and someone wise is that a clever person is clever enough to get themselves out of a situation that a wise person would not have got themselves into in the first place.

If I am not for me, who will be? If I am for only me, who am I?

Sorrow which is never spoken is the heaviest load to bear – Samuel Butler

A person should never be ashamed to admit that they have been in the wrong, which is but saying ... that they are wiser today than they were yesterday – Jonathan Swift

Life does not cease to be funny when people die, any more than it ceases to be serious when people laugh. George Bernard Shaw
