In the ordinary

Come to a quiet place, a place so quiet that you can hear the grass grow.

Run your fingers through the softness of its petals and listen: listen to the earth, the warm earth, the life pulse, of us all.

Rest your body against its warmth: feel its greatness, the pulse and throb, the foundation of the world.

Look up into the sky, the all-embracing sky, the canopy of heaven.

How small we really are: specks in the greatness but still a part of it all.

We grow from the earth and find our own place.
