Mary's Guest

The pain being over,
now I feel the sense of loss.
To see, to touch,
caress and kiss
can never be the same as when my body
was your home.
Then you were mine,
and yet not mine.
For when you stirred, (although that was our secret)
I knew
the life contained within me was not me.
You were my guest
my body housed your need until it grew too great.
And though
a little while I can sustain you yet,
the first painful
parting's done
from now
it is all partings.

From me you learn
to walk,
that you can be
the Way that I may learn to tread.

From me you learn
the words
that you can speak
the Truth
that I may comprehend.

From me you suck
the life,
that you can be
the Living Bread
that I may feed upon
and live.

From me you learn
the love
which is the sword
that pierces my heart
through,
and nails you to the cross.

In your necessity
my dearest dear
you were the guest
I entertained.
Now you are host
and at your table
I shall be sustained.
